Shareholder

Ben Reed was drawn to the law, and specifically to litigation, at a young age when he excelled in debate. His natural ability to understand what made a good argument led him first to law school and later to the courtroom. Corporate litigation backed by years of trial experience. Ben's practice is built on general business and corporate litigation where he represents trucking companies, financial servicing companies, equipment dealers, and nonprofit organizations, and does collections work and other litigation as for his clients. He has four years of experience as a criminal defense attorney and working in family law. As a result, he has argued many motions and tried dozens of cases and, when compared to many other civil litigation attorneys, he has much more courtroom and trial experience. Courtroom experience that translates to better counsel. Ben's prior courtroom experience makes him skilled at gauging the likelihood of success in your specific situation and also means he will not hesitate to take your case to trial if that is in your best interest. Beyond that, his experience leads him to communicate thoroughly, quickly, and efficiently.
