

Robert D. Maher

Shareholder

Rob focuses his practice on creditors' rights, corporate and real estate. These areas have allowed him to serve as outside general counsel for a number of small businesses. Rob has led clients through a wide variety of real estate transactions and litigation, secured transactions, insolvency and financial services litigation, complex receivership appointments, foreclosures, partitions, and condemnations. Rob began his practice at a national firm in its insolvency group. He uses that experience to lead clients through all chapters of bankruptcy.

Having an extensive background in loan enforcement and finance, Rob represents many well-respected banks and financial institutions on matters involving loan priority, claims, and judgments, both locally and nationally. Vehemently protecting the client's loan position is his goal. When a borrower, vendor, or debtor enters a client's watch list or files for bankruptcy, Rob strategically navigates the creditor client through the loan remedies or complicated bankruptcy processes, procedures, and timelines. Rob also guides clients on the front-end documentation of loans. He has represented clients in multi-million-dollar loan transactions involving various types of borrowers, both real and personal property collateral, including multi-level borrower structures. His work also includes the back-end, default, and workout end of loan enforcement through forbearance agreements; modification agreements; and deeds in lieu of foreclosure agreements, or consensual receivership appointments. Rob's clients range from one of the largest small business lenders in the United States to rural banks with one branch. Regardless of size, it is Rob's goal to protect that lender's loan position and to effectively and efficiently maximize recovery.

Another facet of Rob's practice includes advising commercial, retail, industrial, and residential real estate clients in numerous areas, including acquisition, financing, development, renting, leasing, and liquidation of real estate. He recently represented a Missouri-based frozen custard chain in the acquisition and leasing of retail locations throughout the United States.

Rob grew up in a small town in the Kansas City area. His dad was a teacher and a three-sport high school coach. Rob went to Baker University in Baldwin City, Kansas, where he played football. He was fortunate enough to participate in two football Final Fours while at Baker University under the coaching and leadership of a College Football Hall of Fame coach. He has taken the preparation, organization, management, leadership, and advocacy he learned from the Baker coaches to shape his law career and to tackle every client's issue with that same advocacy and preparation.
